AID AGREEMENT FOR GERMANY IS BELIEVED NEAR

Seven-Power Conference Assembled to Pull Country From Chaos

HOOVER PLAN HELPED

Delegates Said to Have Agreed on Extension of Credits' Time

By Otto D. Tolischus
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

LONDON, July 22.—Apparently saved from almost certain failure by the timely intervention of President Hoover, the seven-power conference of ministers assembled here to pull Germany out of its economic chaos today was reported to have reached an agreement embodying temporary aid to the financially impoverished Reich.

At a conference in the cabinet room of the British Foreign Office, the delegates, it was learned from an authoritative source, agreed to extend for three months longer all outstanding short-term credits at present enjoyed by Germany.

LONDON, July 22.—The London conference took up today the recommendations of the Committee of Finance Ministers which studied yesterday means of immediately restoring confidence in Germany's stability.

The recommendations were based on President Hoover's new proposal that international bankers not only refrain from withdrawal of short-term credits from Germany but increase them pending the drafting of a plan for further aid to that country.

With Prime Minister MacDonald acting as chairman and with Chancellor Bruening present, the committee of finance ministers held a six-hour meeting yesterday.

The full benefit of President Hoover's proposal may have been impaired by Secretary of State Stimson. In the face of news that details of the new proposal had been made public in Washington, Stimson gave American and European correspondents the impression last night that no such proposal had been laid before the conference. His action served to confuse the British and European opinion and robbed the new proposal of much of its psychological value as a restorative of confidence, it was held in some quarters.

Three Young Men Fined For Disorderly Conduct

Three young men fell into the clutches of Chief of Police Jones last night when they were acting in a disorderly manner along Pond street.

The trio, according to the police, were going along Pond street, kicking over signs, and smashing bottles on the sidewalk.

The three were apprehended by Chief Jones and placed under arrest. They were each fined $8.50 on a charge of disorderly conduct this morning at a hearing before Justice of Peace James Guy.

The three gave their names as follows:

Leonard Bell, 23, 218 Walnut street; Fred Reeves, 25, 449 Lafayette street; Albert Goodman, 27, 222 Dorrance street.

Police are determined that disorderly conduct along the streets must stop.

Cooing on the Sands

Trying to cram in a short honeymoon at Atlantic City, N. J., between theatrical engagements, Rudy Vallee and his pretty bride, the former Fay Webb, are shown happily lolling on the sands of the famous oceanside resort. Out of the picture, but otherwise very much in evidence, a huge crowd dogged every step made by the stage and radio crooner as he and his dark-haired wife tried to enjoy their honeymoon.

ANOTHER "ROUND" IN HILLTOWN SCHOOL CASE

Nothing New Brought Out At The Hearing Held Yesterday

ADJOURN TO TUESDAY

DOYLESTOWN, July 22.—Another "round" in the long drawn-out Hilltown Township school directors' scrap was completed in court yesterday when Judge Samuel E. Shull, of Stroudsburg, adjourned until next Tuesday after testimony had been completed in the equity suit in which a tax-payer of Hilltown seeks to restrain the school directors from proceeding with the proposed consolidated school project.

It was a scorching hot day and more than one witness as well as the Court breathed a sigh of relief when the case had been completed. Argument on the testimony will be held on a future date. In the meantime the erection of a new school building is being held up. Some contend that the so-called tax-payers' association wants just exactly that and for that reason make an effort to have the affair strung out over a long period of time.

Nothing new under the sun was brought out in yesterday's testimony. Everything said in court had been heard of before or read on documents galore in court or dismissed around Hilltown fireplaces.

What the school directors brought out yesterday was that everything they did in preparing for the proposed bond issue for a new school in Hilltown was "on the level" in every detail and that no transactions completed by the directors or the architects showed evidence of fraud or illintent.

The bill in equity was filed by William O. Schell, of Hilltown, a member of the Hilltown Taxpayers' Association, who have been fighting the school board members tooth and nail for a year. The bill sets forth that the entering into a contract for the erection of the school would be unlawful because of allegations which refer chiefly to plans and specifications for the building and that the creation of said contract will increase the indebtedness of the school district without authority by law.

The Schell contingent witnesses testified yesterday that the plans and specifications submitted the bidders were indefinite and uncertain and so unfair that it will be detrimental to

FLOWERS CHEER MANY INSTITUTION INMATES

Blooms Distributed Among Those Who Are Ill and Crippled

A WORTHY EFFORT

By Louise I. Denn
(Assistant to Secretary, "Flowers For the Flowerless" Committee)

Three days of July were typical of most other days at the flower booth, at Pratt street and Frankford avenue, Philadelphia. The flowers came, the helpers smiled a welcome and bunched the blooms, and the beneficiaries called at noon to take them—where? One of the helpers went to see.

Wednesday, she was welcomed at the Lighthouse Community Center, in Kensington. A little child was in the office. "What's the trouble?" was the question. "Mother's sick," came the mournful reply, and with it a shy glance toward the flowers. As the supervisor knew, Mother was ill, indeed, and the boy ran off with a smiling "thank you"—and—a bouquet from a Burholme garden.

Another child looked wistfully at the grateful lad hurrying home to Mother. She had no mother to whom she could take flowers—but—shouldn't she have a rose? And a gardener from Cheltenham said "Take mine."

Thursday morning—a gorgeous display, and our helper at the Frankford Day Nursery, at noon, where eager hands grasped "a flower to share with Mother" after her warm, busy day at work. So, Somerton brightened a cloudy day.

From Frankford to Torresdale—Brown's Farm. Eighty children with outstretched arms, and a "please gib me a faw-er?" Two hours later, the halls, dormitories, school rooms, and dining room were transformed into a sort of beauty by the artistic arrangement of the blooms in colorful vases and baskets by the supervisor. The children see them everywhere they go, thus—Bristol florists and gardeners have touched the heart of each child.

Friday, our helper visited the Lutheran Settlement House from which the flowers are sent to many shut-ins. She stepped inside three homes. Her first greeting was, "Oh, you have roses. I smell them," and a Frankford rose felt the touch of a blind girl's caress. In another home, above a store, lives a patient young girl who is flowerless. She has been lying on her back for fourteen years, but is cheerful and bright in spite of her suffering. A florist's kind gift now nods at her bedside, and tells her that someone cares. An old lady sits by her window, and longingly looks toward the door. Her face brightens, though the tears fall in gratitude, as the beauty of a Langhorne garden is placed in her arms. The flowers are placed in a vase where an invalid may be cheered by them, too.

During the last week, the Seventh United Presbyterian Church, the Frankford Presbyterian Church, the Frankford Congregational Church, the Somerton Women's Club and the Thirty-fifth Ward Republican Club have been represented at the Northeast booth, and in addition to these groups, Fox Chase, Burholme, Cheltenham, Langhorne and Bristol gardeners and florists sent many beahtiful blooms, which were given to the Kensington Neighborhood Holse, the Frankford Hospital, the Lighthouse Community Center, Brown's Farm, the Shriners' Hospital for Crippled Children, and the Lutheran Settlement House.

The flowerless—everywhere—tell the donors, daily, that "the venture is worthwhile"—this venture of the Art Alliance and io-operating organizations.

FRED KRING, JR., TELLS OF HIGH LIGHTS ON HIS TRIP TO INDIA; JAPANESE AND CHINESE CITIES ALSO FURNISH MANY UNUSUAL SIGHTS

Young Man From Bristol Will Be Located in Palembang, India, for Three Months—Sun Described As Almost Unbearable During the Day

A letter written while enroute to India by Fred Kring, Jr., to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kring, of Pond street, furnishes many paragraphs of interest to Bristol people. The ports of interest touched, something of the scenic grandeur of the places visited, and customs of the people are well told of in the letter, which follows:

April 2, 1931.

Dear Folks:

Just about high time I were getting off this long-promised detail word. It's the same old story, the passage over was so delightful that one hardly had an opportunity to get off cards. Then too, I postponed writing until we had touched at the most interesting ports and so before I knew it we were in Manila, where we were greeted with extremely hot weather, making letter-writing even more so of a task.

Just at present aboard an oversized tug boat, the M. S. "Myer," bound from Singapore to Palembang. However before dwelling in any length on this tub let me briefly recount the high points of the passage over. If my memory serves me correctly I wrote from Honolulu, covering the trip that far. This may be repetition, but Honolulu is certainly deserving of added comment. Found it a most beautiful spot, boasting of ideal weather. Am in a position to appreciate mild weather since getting into these parts where it is unbearably hot. The Americans certainly can be proud of what they have done on the islands. Of course nature is decidedly favorable with its abundance of flowers and palms. Certainly regret that we don't have a refinery in Honolulu requiring a three months' stay instead of out here. After a full day and night at Honolulu we sailed the morning of the sixth, taking on about 80 additional passengers.

And so began the long pull across the Pacific. Normal ship life soon took hold, with everyone practically acquainted.

* * * *

We arrived in Yokohama on the morning of the 14th. A number of the people were disembarking here, so after fond farewells we arranged a car to drive us through the surrounding country. Made our first stop at Kamakura, where one sees the largest Japanese Buddha. Certainly an impressive sight, particularly so if one considers the centuries that the Japanese have been worshipping there. Then a call or two at some of the larger temples and so on to Tokyo. Much to my surprise I found Tokyo a very modern city, very much like any large continental city. Absolutely no indication that it might be a Japanese city. This of course can be attributed to the earthquake in 1925, when the city was completely destroyed and has consequently been entirely rebuilt. Stopped off at the Imperial Hotel, and had a very excellent lunch consisting of mainly the famous Japanese lobster. And so back to Yokohama to make the boat which sailed late afternoon.

The countryside of Japan was not as picturesque as I imagined it. However I am told that we saw it a bit out of season. The cherry blossoms for which Japan is famous were due to be out in about a month which will naturally improve it scenically.

An overnight run and into Kobe the morning of the 15th. Found Kobe more interesting than either Yokohama or Tokyo. It's typical Japanese, with narrow streets, many shops, quaint houses, many temples, peculiar signs, and all in all what one imagined a city in Japan to look like. Partook here of a native Japanese lunch. First had to take our shoes off and then were assigned to a private dining-room. Had to sit down on the floor before a very low table. Next thing two girls came in and began preparing the meal right before one, over a charcoal fire. Consisted of cut-up chicken and various types of greens. After this was cooked, one dipped it into a bowl containing a raw egg and ate it. All this had to be done with chop-sticks. Had a great deal of difficulty at first, but soon mastered the art. In fact towards the end of the meal I had become so adept that I could pick up single grains of rice. If I must say it myself you're a finished product when you can do that. Oh, yes, with the meal, one drinks hot Japanese wine. Personally the wine was all I enjoyed, as I'm not keen on seeing raw chicken cooked and then have to eat it. With the lunch over the geisha girls put on a native dance. That concluded a rather unsatisfactory Japanese lunch. A bit more sightseeing in the afternoon through the slums of the city and then to the boat which again sailed later in the afternoon.

And so for the trip through the yellow sea to Shanghai, our first Chinese port. Arrived at the mouth of the river on which the city is located early morning of the 17th. Started up the river at daybreak arriving at the city proper about noon. Passage up the river was very interesting since one had an opportunity to see many types of peculiar Chinese boats. Most impressed in the manner with which the Chinese handle their boats. All done by sculling and I must say they are as expert as any one I've ever seen. It may sound exaggerated, but I saw two Chinese kids neither over ten, handling a boat as large as the barges running up and down the Delaware. When it comes to handling sails they would make the best fishermen look poor.

Docked about noon, so we had lunch before going ashore. First in order was sightseeing in rickshas. After seeing the European part of the city we went out into the Chinese quarters. What one sees there is indescribable. Filth and poverty is no name for it. You could never picture it unless you actually saw it. Seems like about a million people live on every street.

On the morning of the 20th we arrived at Hong Kong, boasting of a very beautiful harbor. It reminded me very much of Rio.

Upon arrival in Manila I located at the Manila Hotel. The following day with a car placed at our disposal by friends in Manila we toured the city and surrounding country. Most in-

TO LAUNCH CONSTRUCTION ON ROAD BUILDING

Governor Pinchot to Start the Highway Project Tomorrow

TO TAKE PICK IN HAND

YORK, July 22.—Governor Gifford Pinchot tomorrow will trade the fishing rod which has occupied him these past two weeks and the symbolic sceptre of government for a common, every-day pick, to launch actual construction on his favored 20,000-mile rural road program.

Start of work on the highway project, approved by the last session of the Legislature and outlined in detail by State highway engineers, will be marked with pageantry and appropriate ceremony.

On the five-mile road between Lewisberry and Rossville, near here, at a point near Smith's Grove, the Governor will sink his pick in the road bed, tug it out, turn a spadeful of earth, make the appropriate remark and retire.

Highway engineers who will be waiting, a trifle impatiently doubtless, for the ceremonies to end, will immediately blast out a section of rock and a fleet of tractors, road machines, steam shovels and other equipment will swing into action for the real business of road building.

The Governor's opening pick-swing is scheduled to be swung at 1 p. m., daylight-saving time.

Besides Governor Pinchot, Secretary of Highways Sam Lewis, members of the State cabinet, representatives of the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads, representatives of motor clubs, legislators and county officials will be present for the ceremony.

Preceding the ground-breaking, Lewis will take the Governor and his official party over the road, the first mile of which has been left in its original condition. Immediately after the Governor turns the first spadeful of earth and real work starts, a "Pageant of Progress" depicting modes of travel since the first road was laid out will start.

The pageant will include every kind of transport which the old road has witnessed, from horseback through the stage coach and Conestoga wagon, the buckboard, the surrey and the automobile. Completing the transportation picture will be a squadron of Army airplanes which will fly over the scene.

The road, which will be developed as a "model rural road" to exemplify just what the administration intends to do with similar highways throughout the State, was first hewn out of the wilderness well over a century ago by Quaker settlers, to link their meeting houses at Rossville and Lewisberry.

CROYDON MAN IN JAIL IN WAR ON ILLEGAL TAXIS

Charles J. Rauback Gets 30 Days for Violation of Injunction

CONTEMPT OF COURT

Operated His Taxi in Spite of Court Order Not To Do So

DOYLESTOWN, July 22.—Charles J. Rauback, of Croydon, who operated a taxicab service along the Bristol pike from Torresdale to Bristol and other points, in spite of the fact that he had been restrained from doing so by an order of court, was sentenced to the County Prison yesterday for 30 days for contempt of court.

Rauback, who was seriously injured while a member of the Philadelphia Fire Department, suffers from a nervous affliction. He testified that the taxi business was his only way of making a living, but the Delaware River Coach Company, who were granted the injunction some time ago restraining certain taxi operation along the Bristol highway, were directly responsible for Rauback's arrest last week.

Judge Calvin S. Boyer sentenced Rauback to serve 30 days.

Paul Robin, 37, a New York Filipino, who was arrested last week in Doylestown for transporting seventy pints of "Old Overholt Whiskey," was sentenced to two months in the county prison and fined $200 and costs. When arrested Robin told State Police that he was on a vacation trip. When the trunk and salesman's sample case was opened the whiskey was located. He purchased it in New York for fifty cents a pint and intended to sell it in Philadelphia at $2.00 a bottle, Robin told the Court.

A delightful afternoon was spent playing all kinds of games and prizes were given to Ruth Campbell and Donald Richmond. Before departing for their homes, the children were invited to the dining room where refreshments were served.

The room was attractively decorated with pink and yellow crepe paper streamers which gracefully hung from the four corners to the center of the room, then draped over chandelier. A bouquet of cut flowers and a large birthday cake decorated with seven candles, formed the centerpiece on the table and favors were small pink and yellow baskets filled with candy.

A number of features have been arranged for both nights.

It is being planned to make these two evening programs very attractive and it is expected that a banner attendance will be attracted.

Saturday evening there will be a concert by the Burlington Quartette. This group of singers is well known and Bristol folks will be delighted when they hear them.

MOTHER OF FIVE GIVEN TERM IN JAIL

Bristol Woman Told She is No Help to Her Children

ALSO FINED $300, COSTS

"Your children are not benefitted by your presence and apparently you are of no help to them," Judge Calvin S. Boyer told Pauline Ksynaik, 38, of 244 Hayes street, Bristol, yesterday morning at Doylestown before sending her to the County Prison for thirty days and fining her $300 and costs for operating a speakeasy. She has five children.

Mrs. Ksynaik, who said she has been living in Bristol for seven years, pleaded guilty to charges of possessing liquor. Chief of Police Linford Jones informed Judge Boyer that the Ksynaik place had the reputation of being a speakeasy and the scene of wild parties.

When the Bristol police raided the place on June 13, they seized a quantity of whiskey, alcohol and homebrew. The woman denied that she sold the liquor, but simply had it for parties, sickness and for a christening. The officers found a five-gallon can of alcohol buried in the backyard.

Walter Kordilio and Rudolph Sparro, of Cleveland, who have served forty days in the county prison since being arrested for breaking into a Fallsington store, were directed by Judge Boyer to return to their homes. They were placed on probation for two years and sentence was suspended. Information from Cleveland received here by the police showed no previous criminal record.

CONSERVATIVE

While unfavorable working conditions, long hours and low wages undoubtedly forced labor to organize the National Bureau of Economic Research has produced some statistics which knock the foundations from under the popular notion that good times weaken trade unions and bad times strengthen them.

Through a comparison of census occupational records and the actual memberships of labor organizations it is disclosed that during the last 20 years business retrenchments have been invariably accompanied by a diminishing union membership and periods of general prosperity have increased the percentage of union affiliation.

In this refutation of a public impression lies a note of praise for American labor. Here is proof that labor in this country, having obtained favorable working conditions, does not suffer under the delusion that by organization it can defeat the economic laws and create employment and high wages at those periodic intervals when the world markets are overflowing and the buying power of the world is depleted. If American labor is uniting to grab, it has sufficient insight and intelligence to choose a time when the world has the wherewithal with which to meet labor's demands.

Not only is labor in this country not radical but it is not well organized. Only 20 per cent of the 26,000,000 wage-earners in this country are unionists. Furthermore, only 19 per cent of unionized labor is not affiliated with the sane and stable American Federation of Labor and included in that 19 per cent are the equally conservative railroad brotherhoods.

POLITICAL HOKUM

Democratic propagandists have hit heavy seas in their fevered campaign to discredit President Hoover and his administration and to destroy public confidence in them. Forced to manufacture their own mud from false elements, they have resorted to claptrap and chicanery; finding no real issues, they have attempted to fashion them from the fabric of their imagination and bias.

Mired in its own mud, the Democratic publicity bureau at Washington has grasped the flimsy straw of protest against the present tariff law. But with every wind and tide unfavorable to its chosen course it is finding sailing difficult.

When it attributed the business depression to the tariff, there crops up some new evidence that conditions would be worse without tariff protection. When the bureau alleges that the duties are too high, some Democratic leader arises to demand still higher rates for the protection of his constituents.

If the present tariff policy is suicidal for the United States, as the Democrats claim, then Canada is bent on suicide, for she is imitating that policy as rapidly as the necessary legislation can be enacted. Her rates have been boosted, and now she is creating a tariff commission for the scientific revision of those rates either up or down.

When will the Democratic tariff mourners wake up to the fact that they will not find sympathy either at home or abroad?

At Mrs. Lorrimer's request, Mary Lou assumes the role of Delight. Complications arise when, after months of happy companionship, Travers insists upon knowing if Mary Lou loves him. She realizes she cannot go on acting for she has grown to care. At the crucial moment, Larry Mitchell, Mary Lou's newspaper reporter friend, locates the real Delight acting in a revue. Mrs. Lorrimer, favoring Mary Lou, hopes that Delight is not Travers' wife and that she will return to England. After a sleepless night, Mary Lou visits Delight. She finds her hardened by life and misfortune. Mary Lou broaches the subject of Delight's marriage. Delight no longer loves Travers, whom she thought dead. She surmises that Mary Lou loves Travers. Mary Lou asks Delight to give her a week in which to persuade Mrs. Lorrimer to see her.

CHAPTER XLVI.

MARY LOU shook hands with Delight gravely.

"Good-by," she said.

"Not good-by?"

But Mary Lou knew it must be good-by. She hoped never to set eyes upon Delight Harford again. When Mrs. Lorrimer had been persuaded to see Lorry's side, his right of choice, his right to the truth, she, Mary Lou, would go away somewhere where she would never see any of them again, especially this woman whose place she had taken and who had now returned. She, Mary Lou, must be the usurper.

She left and stood out on the street, blinded by the Spring sunlight; hailed a taxi and went to the Pennsylvania Station and took a train to Oakdale. Waiting for it, in the station, she went into a lunch room and drank some milk and ate something, mechanically enough. But she was faint with hunger, and with a vast emptiness of spirit which had nothing whatever to do with her body.

Woman's Intuition

At Oakdale she saw Billy, forced herself to listen to new symptoms which Aunt Adelaide had acquired since last she had been there, talked to Gram, played with the little boy and got a train back to New York in the middle of the afternoon, arriving home—home?—in time for dinner.

She was tired, she said, when Lorrimer, back from a successful day at the field, teased her because she was quiet. Yes, she had been in town, on various errands. Margaret watched her anxiously. After dinner when they were alone for a moment, she asked her:

"Anything wrong out on Long Island? Is there anything I can do?"

"No, they're all fine," Mary Lou told her. "I'm just tired, that's all."

But it wasn't like Mary Lou to tire easily. Margaret looked at her with compunction. The strain was telling on the child. And more than ever she was determined that somehow this—this intruder into their now ordered lives—should be disposed of, and somehow, some way, Mary Lou and Lorrimer brought to happiness.

Lorrimer was in excellent spirits that night. He seized Mary Lou and took her, by force, out to walk with him in the budding gardens, along the sweet-smelling borders. He was gentle with her and considerate, but, he said, after a day in the shops the air would do her good. He did not refer, in words, to what had happened the night of the Wynnes' party, but he held her arm close within his own and bent his tall head over hers and was, mutely, the lover he had been, the lover he always was, with her. It was unfortunate that he should have chosen that night.

She went to bed, half ill with worry and unhappiness. No use to talk to Mrs. Lorrimer that night. She herself was in no fit state for persuasion, argument. It would have to wait a day or two. She had a week in which to accomplish her purpose, a week in which to break her heart. For hearts break gradually and often. . . .

Too Honest

After Mary Lou had left her, Delight Harford took counsel with herself. She had, for some years, been her own best—and worst—adviser, guide, philosopher, mentor and friend. She had liked the younger girl. She had felt for her that curious mixture of tolerance, pity and impatience with which a woman of her experience regards a girl of Mary Lou's type. She thought her honest and candid, and mistaken.

For, argued Delight, if she really loves Lorry and has persuaded him to love her, what a fool she is to throw it all away without a battle! For much as she had come to dislike Lorrimer's unknown mother, Delight could see her point of view and was frank to admit to herself that in Mrs. Lorrimer's place she would commit just the sins of omission she imagined the other woman was planning.

Mary Lou had asked Delight to give her a week in which to change Mrs. Lorrimer's mind. Delight was perfectly willing. She would not approach the Lorrimers, and yet she began to think it wise that she have them looked up in some way, shape or form. She wanted to be very sure of her ground. She had not made any promise to Mary Lou which would preclude such a procedure.

The following day was Saturday. Delight went through the familiar motions of the matinee and evening performances mechanically enough, deeply preoccupied with her own amazing and unexpected problem. After the Saturday night show she joined a party of other girls who were going out to Long Island with half a dozen men. Among them was an elderly person, a stock broker, whose air upon this occasion was that of the small boy who sneaks behind the barn to smoke a forbidden cigaret. Delight made herself very agreeable to him. And in the course of the, to her, rather monotonous evening, she inquired carelessly about "people called Lorrimer." She'd known the son of the family at one time, she said, many years ago.

Mrs. Lorrimer seized Mary Lou and took her, by force, out to walk with him in the budding gardens.

Mr. Evanson obligingly expatiated upon the Lorrimers, their social position, their vast amount of money, which, he explained, was soaked away in real estate—apartments mostly, with some hotel holdings, government bonds and such, and therefore probably as free from the inroads of the late stock market disaster as anybody's could be. He spoke of Margaret, whom he had once met, "a beautiful woman," he said. And then added idly that he had heard the son was, unfortunately, an invalid.

"Shell-shocked, or something," said Mr. Evanson. "No one sees him, and his mother rarely goes out now. It used to be quite an event when she appeared at the opera with Lorrimer, senior. He was a remarkable man," droned Mr. Evanson.

"They live in the country, do they not?" asked Delight, with her most English accent and most bored Mayfair manner.

"In Connecticut. At Westmill. I understand they have a gorgeous place there," sighed Mr. Evanson. "Them as has, gits. Some people have all the luck . . . and the lucky breaks as well. Take my case, Miss Hackett. Two years ago I bought a block of United Fisheries—"

He wandered on, but Delight was no longer listening. She watched, idly, the crowded dancing floor, the orchestra of black and perspiring men, the whorls of blue smoke rising to the low ceiling, heard the chatter and the laughter, the hysterical shrieks of a woman at a nearby table, listened to one of her apartment-mates quarreling with the silly college boy who sat next to her—

"I thought you were a good egg. You make me tired, you boys. Something for nothing; that's all you think of. Well, I wasn't born yesterday," the lovely Muriel was saying—and it was obvious that she had not been—while she grew more Cockney with each spoken word.

Just a Memory

Delight listened, however, without hearing. The Lorrimers were substantial people. Again she thought of safety, protection, freedom from financial and other worries. She had never thought to see Travers Lorrimer again; had thought of him, when she did so at all, which was infrequent, as one thinks of one's youth—vanished, regretted, never to be regained; had thought of him falling into flames toward the furrowed earth, dying a clean and valiant death, a young Icarus.

But he lived.

What How Why ?

PLYMOUTH FLOATING POWER

THE WHOLE NATION WANTS TO KNOW MORE ABOUT IT

The revolutionary character of the New Plymouth has created a great flood of interest. Even the hardiest of skeptics are so amazed at this new four that performs like an eight that they ask eagerly for the facts behind this tremendous accomplishment.

What is Floating Power?

Floating Power is a term applied to the new and revolutionary principle of mounting the engine in the car frame, developed by Chrysler Motors engineers for the New Plymouth.

Just how is the engine mounted?

On two live-rubber mountings nearly an inch thick. These mountings are so placed that a line drawn through them passes through the center of gravity of the engine. Thus the engine is suspended in perfect balance.

What does Floating Power do?

The live-rubber mountings allow the engine to rock upon its natural axis as if in a cushioned cradle. Vibration is thus entirely eliminated from the car.

Why does Floating Power succeed when all other methods fail?

Because Chrysler Motors engineers have not tried merely to dampen vibration; they have achieved an entirely new principle which dissipates the motor impulses so that they never reach the body and frame.

Why and How is Power Increased?

Because the elimination of vibration allows higher compression, which gives greater horsepower without increasing cylinder size. Floating Power makes possible 56 brake-test horsepower and actual stop-watch speeds of 65 and 70 miles an hour, and pick-up from 0 to 40 miles in 9.7 seconds.

What else does Plymouth offer?

A score of things! Plymouth's Free Wheeling combines the advantages of the various types now in use. As a result, it permits Free Wheeling in all forward speeds, and it also may be completely locked out. The Easy-Shift transmission which enables you to shift, without clashing, from second into high and back into second, if you wish, at speeds up to 50 miles an hour. The new, double-drop frame for greater safety and roadability. New, eye-compelling beauty. Internal hydraulic brakes. Safety-Steel body.

You must see and drive the car to appreciate the phenomenal performance and value made possible by one of the greatest engineering developments the industry has ever seen.

ST. ANN'S VICTORIOUS OVER HIBERNIAN NINE

Schedule For Tonight
ST. ANN'S vs. EMILIE
(At Emilie)

(By T. M. Juno)

St. Ann's continued their winning streak of the second half of the Bristol Twilight League last night when they downed the Hibernians 7-5 for their fifth consecutive win. The game was played on St. Ann's field.

By winning the "Saints" kept in the running for the second half pennant and are only a half game behind the Federals who are in second place. The Federals are only a few points behind the Emilie team, which is leading the league with five victories and nary a defeat. Tonight something will happen when the "Saints" battle Emilie.

"Charlie" Whyno started on the peak for the winners and retired after his mates had given him a six run lead in the first three frames. Seneca followed and pitched the fourth and fifth and was found for two runs in the last frame he pitched. Brushia threw them up in the last inning and was hit for three tallies.

"Gene" Dugan was on the mound at the beginning of the game for the losers and after six runs were scored against him was relieved by Ennis who only allowed a run during his stay.

Three double-plays, two by the "Hiboes" and one by the St. Ann's team were the features of the game. The box score:

Time to Trade In Hens On New Pullets, He Says

"Now's the time to 'trade in' those old hens on new pullets," says Robert Pearson, local dealer. "You can get more for the culls now than later and the money they bring will provide a good growing mash for the growing pullets, a feed that will get them ready for the nest early this fall when egg prices start upward!"

He believes this good advice in view of market experts' predictions of better egg prices next fall. Less chicks were started this spring, market experts say, which means fewer pullets. Fall eggs must come from pullets, so there will be fewer eggs.

During July and the part of August are the days to cull unprofitable birds. "In culling the flock," says Mr. Pearson, "it is well to bear in mind that early molters are usually profit eaters. Late molters that molt fast are the high producers—the money makers."

There are a number of points to keep in mind when culling, such as the spread from the point of the keel to the pelvic bones, whether the head is narrow and snaky in the case of the poor layer or whether there is alertness, bright eyes, full red comb as in the case of the good layer. All of these things, and many more should be remembered, all of which Mr. Pearson will be glad to explain to anyone interested in culling their flock and increasing their poultry profits by getting rid of the boarders. He says he will help cull the flocks of those who wish help.

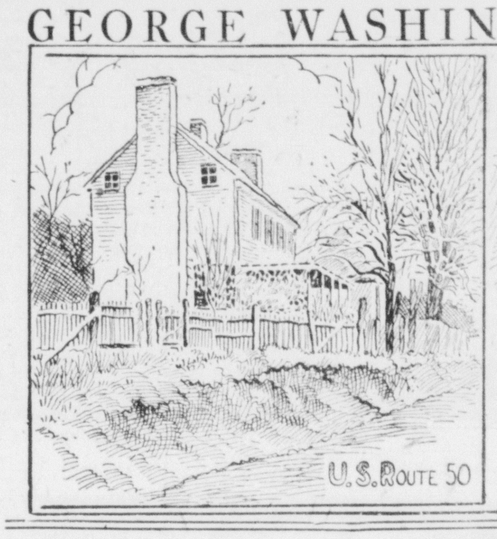
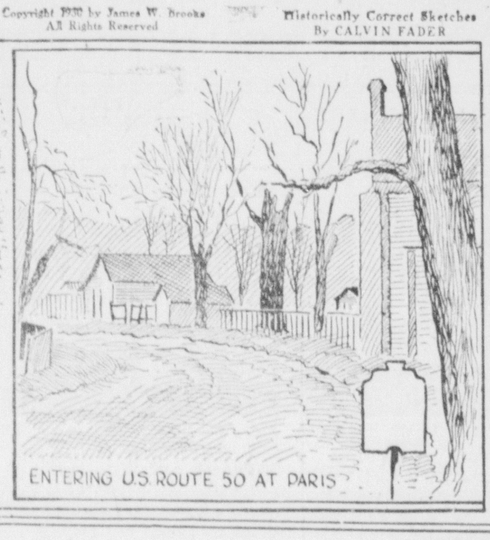
GEORGE WASHINGTON'S TRAVELS 6 By James W. Brooks

Copyright 1930 by James W. Brooks All Rights Reserved

Historically Correct Sketches By CALVIN FADER





Taverns, mountain range and a beautiful river marked the way of Washington as he rode on toward fields of high adventure. It is so today, for Nature has not changed. Near this point he crossed the Shenandoah River by ferry. At Millwood, a short distance beyond, the charm of highway travel is heightened by an excited little stream called "Spout Run" which hurriedly crosses and recrosses the pasture-lined roadway as if it, too, were on an important mission. Coming out on U. S. 50 over the old road to the right at a place called Paris, the young Rider of Destiny was soon at Greenway Court, the Blue Ridge home of Lord Fairfax.

taxpayers if bids are received and contracts are entered into.

The Schell contingent also endeavored to show that the plans and specifications are favorable to certain persons furnishing material and are not drawn so as to invite fair competitive bidding.

Elmer S. Umstead, secretary of the school board, called for the defense, testified that he had a copy of the resolution authorizing the bond issue but that he forgot to enter in his minute book at the time it was passed last July, and that he did not place it in the minute book until last December. The Schell faction alleges that the resolution was not passed or entered until the attorney for the school board advised them to enter it on the minute book last December.

Harvey H. Baum, Arthur M. Boyer, Irwin D. Garis and H. Warren Moyer, members of the school board, all testified that the resolution was properly passed last July but had not been entered in the minute book. They contended that everything the board ever did was for the benefit of the township at large and that the vote on the proposed school building and bond issue was unanimously passed by the board.

That no particular contractor, architect, builder or faction was favored in any way whatsoever was the testimony of Charles A. Corbert, Reading architect; William Marshall Hughes, of Reading, architect who drew the plans for the new school; John B. Edwards, Allentown contractor, and George B. Lengel, Reading heating contractors. All plans and specifications were offered in evidence by both sides, leaving it to Judge Shull to decide what decision to reach in disposing of the matter.

terested in the native life. From pictures you have seen you know their dress is decidedly abbreviated. In the evening we visited Manila's famous dance place, Saint Ann's, which is reported to be the largest dance place in the world. Unique in that it is divided in half, one side being for the natives, and the other for white people. Music goes almost continually. And so came the third day, uneventful except for the fact that I sailed at midnight aboard the S. S. President Garfield. Immediately noticed the difference in passengers. Very few young people, most apparently being couples celebrating either their 25th or 50th anniversary. * * * Well, I just had to adjust myself for four uncomfortable days required to make the run to Singapore. We arrived at that city on the morning of the 30th. Registered at the Raffles, a very nice hotel, but typical of English hotels in that there is a scarcity of rooms with baths. Many of the rooms have what they call a bath, which consists of a large tub to which is attached a dipper. If one becomes accomplished in using the dipper, one can approximate a shower. * * * *Devoted some time in Singapore to sightseeing, taking a trip around the island, visiting one or two rubber plantations and factories, also made a trip through the largest cocoanut plantation. One of our trips included a visit to the Sultan's palace at Johora, several temples, a Mohammedan church or whatever they call them.

I left Singapore yesterday afternoon at four, and here. I am at the end of my story aboard the good ship "Myer" which is just a small freight boat accommodating about 20 (at the most) passengers. On this trip there are seven aboard, including myself. All Dutch.

Due at Palembang in the morning and so I'm faced with the stark realization that a life of luxury and ease is over for at least three months. Well frankly I'm quite ready for a bit of hard work. But frankly, too, not too much, for I go big for this ocean travel. I'll soon be looking forward to the trip over to Europe, particularly since many of the Empress' passengers will be there.

Am feeling very fit. Have already taken on a generous coat of tan, which isn't difficult with this sun.

Trust this finds you all well.

Love,

FRED, JR.

year-old Frederick Leyton Kremer, on charges of setting fire to a barn on the farm of Charles Shirk at Schwenksville, near here. Kremer was found by state highway patrolmen Boyle and Ross hiding in a corn field near the scene of the blaze which cost approximately $30,000 damages.

According to state police young Kremer's mother is the widow of a former well-to-do resident of Merion, Pa. The mother resides in Atlantic City at present, they disclosed.

Our nation has come into a glory transcending that which any prophet has foretold, a glory of the many and not of the few, and it principally concerns those who were once known as the common people, and their wages, manner of living, automobiles, electric apparatus, savings accounts and other such lowly and material affairs. . . . Good..

they've got to be good !

It doesn't "just happen" that Chesterfield holds its smokers. Milder! You never get that "over-smoked" feeling.

Always cool and comfortable. They're made that way. And they keep on tasting better! The last Chesterfield of the day is as mild and smooth as the first.

No purer, better-tasting cigarette can be made!

THEY CARRY ON!

TELEGRAPH and RADIO OPERATORS

"stick to their guns," no matter what!

The first letter of the telegrapher's code is "L" for Loyalty. Many lives have been saved by the operator's last stand. You're proud to know folks who look at duty like that!
